

BTO HERONRIES CENSUS 2021 SUMMARY

GARY HAIGH / BTO

INTRODUCTION

Following the drop in coverage due to the first COVID-19 lock-down in 2020, we would like to thank all Heronries Census volunteers and Regional Organisers for their efforts in 2021. By the end of 2021 we had received records from 796 sites. This is similar to the levels of coverage achieved prior to 2020, excluding 2018 when a 'full survey' was carried out which included visits to historical sites (Fig. 1). This level of coverage is all the more impressive as it has been achieved whilst there have been ongoing difficulties caused by the pandemic, and despite a new lock-down being in place early in 2021, which meant that some surveyors were unable to carry out their Census visits. We expect the 2021 total to increase further as we usually receive additional late counts via local bird clubs although, not surprisingly, it is unlikely that the final total will exceed the 897 sites visited in 2019.

Fig 1: Number of Heronries Census sites surveyed 2003 to 2021. Note that in 2003 and 2018 'full surveys' were carried out with additional effort being made to revisit historical sites.

GREY HERON RESULTS

The largest total in 2021 was at a site in Hampshire where 110 nests were counted. The latest UK population estimate is 9,479 apparently occupied nests in 2021, up from 9,121 in 2020. It should be noted that the 2020 estimate may be unreliable due to the poor Census coverage that year, but the 2021 estimate confirms a decrease has occurred from 9,998 in 2019. It is unclear why this decrease may have occurred: the winters of 2019/20 and 2020/21 were both relatively warm compared to average, although 2019/20 was unusually wet and stormy, particularly in February (UK Met Office) when many herons would have been beginning nesting activity. The population has yet to recover from the sharp declines that occurred between 2007 and 2013 when there were several severe winters, which contrasts with the strong recoveries and continued increases that have occurred after previous declines caused by severe weather (Fig 2).

LITTLE EGRET

A total of 1,102 apparently occupied nests were submitted from 122 sites, with the largest count being made in Kent (94 nests). The total is down on the 1,215 nests at 126 sites in 2019 and well below the peak of 1,312 counted in 2017 (Fig 3). All totals are actual counts rather than estimates so do not take variation in site coverage into account, but seem to suggest that numbers have dipped slightly since 2019. As for Grey Heron, though the reason for this slight decrease is unclear, it seems possible that the stormy weather in the 2019/20 could possibly have contributed to increased mortality in spite of the warmer than average weather.

CORMORANT

A total of 1,557 apparently occupied nests was counted at 38 Heronries Census sites, similar to the 1,576 nests counted at 45 sites in 2019 (Fig 4). As for Little Egret, the totals are actual counts rather than population estimates. The sites with missing counts in 2021 include several medium-sized colonies and it is likely that the total will be the highest ever if data are received from these colonies (the current high is 1,592 nests at 30 sites in 2007). We encourage observers to submit counts of tree-nesting Cormorants to the Census (including those which are not nesting with herons), in particular those nesting inland or at other sites not covered by seabird surveys. This will help ensure we can get an accurate understanding of Cormorant population trends.

SCARCER SPECIES

The Heronries Census also collects data on other colonial birds nesting within heronries, to help keep track of the population growth of these species if, as expected, they continue their recent range expansion across the UK. In 2021, we received records of 55 Cattle Egret nests at seven sites, more than three times the 15 nests recorded in 2019. There were 22 Great White Egret nests at three sites and 45 Spoonbill nests at one site (Holkham in Norfolk; see British Birds 114: 316–330 & 114: 511–525). However, we are aware that these records do not give the full picture and we encourage observers to submit records of scarcer heron species to the Heronries Census. This will mean that we can accurately monitor population changes if the populations continue to increase in future years and the direct reporting of breeding to the Rare Breeding Birds Panel (RBBP) begins to drop off. All records of scarce colonial species reported to the Heronries Census will be kept confidential and will be forwarded to the RBBP.

SURVEY TIMETABLE AND TASKS

REMEMBER TO INFORM YOUR REGIONAL ORGANISER (RO) OF ANY NEW HERONRIES SITE YOU FIND.

SPECIAL THANKS

We would like to thank all surveyors and Regional Organisers for their work on the 2021 Census. Space does not permit all observers to be acknowledged individually, but we would especially like to thank the ROs for their efforts.

We would be grateful for help organising the Heronries Census in regions currently without a Regional Organiser (marked VACANT), or those currently being covered on a temporary basis (marked TEMP) If you live in one of these regions and would be interested in taking on the role, please let us know.

Many thanks are due to the ROs listed who stepped down during 2021.

Finally, we would like to thank all the landowners who kindly allow volunteers access to their land to carry out Heronries Census visits.
